Just been for an overnight stay at The University Arms in Cambridge. Recently subjected to a major refurb and rebuild over the last few years. Went to see why all the reviews have been so full of praise and now we can see why. It is simply the only place to stay in Cambridge if you want to give yourself a real treat. All the staff were so friendly and helpful and seemed genuinely to be rather proud to be working at this newly reinvented hotel. The roaring log fire in the library was so inviting and cosy. I would happily hang out in there for a week or more! The books have been brilliantly curated by @heywood hill with a really interesting collection. Afternoon scones and tea is something I've not had for a very long time and wonder why one doesn't take time to do this old ritual at least once a week rather than once a year! (Note to self) The Bar has some amazing cocktails and between the group of six diners we then went on to pretty much eat the entire menu. The chef @the tristan welch is clearly a very gifted and talented leader in the kitchen. The food was absolutely amazing. I was very sad to see the side order of mashed potato being cleared after our main courses as I actually wanted to take it up to our bedroom in case of any food emergency during the night. The puddings are simply out of this world and how we managed to guzzle the plate of chocolates made at the hotel really defies belief. My biggest criticism would be that they let you eat and drink too much at dinner. The thing I was looking forward to the most was the inspired idea of an 'all night curry service' which is such a brilliant idea and something I was really looking forward to trying but the massive dinner they allow you to eat prevented me from being able to have this middle of the night feast. My wife also refused to let me set the alarm for a 3.00am curry call so this was doubly annoying. I am determined to go back, eat slightly less at dinner if possible and make sure the all night curry service gets a comprehensive trial. @university arms #cambridge #hotel #travel #review #food
